

Hearth — Proposal

One simple, free place to find local practitioners and see what's happening in our community.

Hearth — the warm center of a home that people have always gathered around. A fitting name for a space whose whole purpose is to draw us out of our separate homes and into shared warmth, healing, and connection.

The idea

Our community already holds two beautiful things: a wealth of gifted practitioners — massage and somatic therapists, energy healers, facilitators, medicine people — and a calendar full of conscious events. Right now they live in separate, hard-to-navigate places, and the calendar in particular is clunky to read on a phone.

This is a proposal for one warm, phone-friendly website that brings both together. In a single place, anyone can find a practitioner and see what's coming up — ecstatic dance, breathwork, ceremonies, sessions — laid out beautifully and far easier to scan than Google Calendar.

It would be completely free to build and run, require almost no ongoing admin, and reuse the tools we already have.

How it works (in plain terms)

1. Practitioners add themselves through a simple online form — the same easy experience as adding a calendar event. No app, no login, no account.
2. Event hosts change nothing. Events keep flowing through the existing events form and Google Calendar, curated just as they are today.
3. One beautiful website pulls both together — a searchable practitioner directory, and a clean, mobile-friendly list of upcoming events read live from our calendar. Anyone with the link can open it on their phone, search, filter, and tap to contact a practitioner or see an event.
4. The community keeps it healthy. Anyone can flag a listing that looks off. Flags don't do anything automatically — they simply send a quiet heads-up to you or Curtis to take a look. That keeps any one person from unfairly targeting a business, and keeps the workload to an occasional glance.

The whole thing is shared through WhatsApp as a single link — the same way you already point people to the calendar.

Two options

Option A — Hub + a dedicated WhatsApp group

We build the website above and add a new WhatsApp group focused on practitioners. The website is the lasting, searchable home; the group keeps the warm, human side alive — people can still ask "does anyone know a good osteopath?" and get personal recommendations. The group's pinned message holds the website link and the "add yourself" form.

Option B — Hub only (WhatsApp group optional)

We build just the website and link to it from the existing channels. Whether to add a dedicated practitioner WhatsApp group is left entirely to you — you can always add one later, with no extra work on the site itself.

Both options use the exact same website underneath. The only difference is whether we create a new WhatsApp group now or leave that to you.

What it costs and what it asks of you

- Money: nothing. Everything runs on free tools (Google Forms, Google Sheets, the existing Google Calendar, free web hosting).
- Your time: near zero. Listings post on their own, events already flow through the calendar, and you or Curtis are only pinged in the rare case a listing gets flagged. This is actually less hands-on than the calendar runs today.
- From me: I'll build it, set it up, and hand you something simple the community can run without needing a tech person day to day.

Next steps

If this resonates, let me know which option feels right (or what you'd tweak), and I'll build a first version for you and Curtis to try. Once we're happy, we'll write a warm announcement for the community together.

With love and excitement for this one,

Bhavna
